Introduction

Quality Assurance Framework – Self-evaluation Tool

This self-evaluation tool is for information only. The self-evaluation must be completed and submitted through Healthcare Improvement Scotland’s online portal.

Healthcare Improvement Scotland has devised a quality of care approach to bring consistency to its external quality assurance work and to support service providers in evaluating their own care delivery. The approach includes a ‘Quality Assurance Framework \(September 2022\)’, to guide providers through their self-evaluation. A guidance document has also been developed to help providers complete their self-evaluation.

In the self-evaluation we ask you to assess the service’s performance against three key focus areas and seven quality domains. These are:

Key area of focus	Domain
Direction	1. Clear vision and purpose
	2. Leadership and culture
Implementation and delivery	3. Co-design and co-production
	4. Quality improvement
	5. Planning for quality
Results	6. Relationships
	7. Quality control

Your self-evaluation should focus on outcomes as well as processes. This could include a description of the impact of changes or improvement on the delivery of care, or information on how potential impact is being monitored. Healthcare Improvement Scotland will use the submitted self-evaluations to inform their regulatory activity.

There is a comments section at the end of each domain for you to highlight additional relevant information. It is the provider’s responsibility to be open and honest in their response and to consider the self-evaluation in collaboration with relevant staff and stakeholders.

You are encouraged to use information from different sources to triangulate evidence of the quality of service delivery, such as direct observation of care delivery, discussions with staff and patients, and comparison against other services or relevant data.
